CONNECT: STUDENT JOURNALISM TRAINING PROJECT

CONNECT

The CONNECT: Student Journalism Training Project, which runs concurrently with the 2024 National Convention, provides journalism training for up to 12 college students, with all air travel, hotel accommodations and meal costs covered by the organization, allowing the students to immerse themselves in the program completely.

The students are mentored by professional journalists and experienced communicators and produce portfolio-worthy online news packages and podcasts covering local and national LGBTQ+ issues and other news. Most of the student journalists and mentors identify as LGBTQ+ and often the mentoring relationships last into the start of their journalism careers and beyond. The success of the program is measured in the high-quality journalism that is produced each year, as well as the competitive application process for the finite spots. The work produced by the past several years of CONNECT classes is available at nljconnect.com.
